第7题: (11.4 分)

When Louisiana Governor Bobby Jindal touts the state's job market and New Orleans Mayor Ray Nagin sells his city as one of the best places to ride out the recession, it's not just routine boosterism.

In the midst of a severe nationwide downturn, the Louisiana economy is holding up better than most. It's a role reversal from a few years ago, when Louisiana was one of the country's weaker states financially following the destruction caused by Hurricane Katrina.

The state has the 10th lowest unemployment rate and was the only state to add nonfarm jobs in February, the most recent month for which data are available. Sales tax collections in New Orleans have risen close to levels seen before Katrina. And foreclosure rates have remained low by national standards, in part because the state never experienced a housing bubble.

What's unclear is how long the state can keep the downturn's worst demons at bay. March state-by-state employment data, which the Labor Department releases Friday, will offer fresh insights.

The major reconstruction effort that continues more than three and a half years after Katrina partly explains why Louisiana state has been fairly insulated from the worst of the recession.

How many states have a lower unemployment rate than Louisiana?

- A. 9
- B. 10
- C. 11
- D. 49

【正确答案】: A

【答案分析】:

第10题：（11.4分）

New Guidelines for Fighting HIV

At the moment, four million people around the world receive anti-retroviral drugs. There's another five million who need them but don't get them.

The WHO recommendations on when to start treatment for HIV would mean an extra three to five million people would be added to that waiting list. The WHO wants people who have HIV to start drugs before their immune systems get so weak that they start displaying symptoms. A study recently published in the medical journal The Lancet showed starting treatment at the newly recommended level could increase survival by nearly 70% .

It would also add significantly to the cost on health care systems. In South Africa, which has one of the biggest HIV burdens in the world, currently fewer than half of the people who should be receiving HIV drugs get them.

Poor health infrastructure is a common problem for nearly all developing countries. Putting HIV-positive people on drugs earlier would significantly reduce the cost to health systems of treating opportunistic infections- illnesses which take hold while the immune system is weak. It would also greatly improve life expectancy of HIV patients, with repercussions for families and the workforce. The WHO is still working out how much it would cost countries to improve their treatment regimes, but it won't be cheap.

What is the main idea of this passage?

- A. It would add much more cost for the WHO to treat with people who have HIV.
- B. Those people with HIV is a common problem for all developing countries.
- C. Starting treatment early could increase survival opportunities for people with HIV.
- D. The WHO has raised new proposals to fight against AIDS.

- B. Because the WHO has the ability of adding an extra three to five million people to the waiting list.
- C. Because it would add significantly to the cost on health care systems.
- D. Because those who have HIV have become the biggest HIV burdens for the whole world.

【正确答案】: A

【答案分析】:

解析: 文中第二段最后一句提到: "A study recently published in the medical journal The Lancet showed starting treatment at the newly recommended level could increase survival by nearly 70%", 这是对前一句话的解释说明, 可知正确项是(A)。

第12题: (11.4 分)

What conclusion can be drawn from the passage?

- A. It would cost the WHO much more to make HIV-positive people start drugs earlier than treating opportunistic infections.

- C. The WHO is confident of affording the cost to have people with HIV start drugs at earlier time.

第13题: (11.4 分)

The world's demand on gas is expected to increase in the future as climate change concerns grow, while renewable energy is still expensive to be developed, a prominent economist said on Friday. "Demand on gas will be the fastest among other energy sources as it's cheaper than oil and people are more concerned about climate change issue," Cristof Ruhl, even Chief Economist of British Petroleum, a multinational oil and gas Company told the press. According to Ruhl, even though renewable energy is much more environmental friendly, it costs too much to be developed. "In Brazil, it's worth to use the bio-energy as the country is rich with bio-resources but it costs too much if it's implemented in other countries," said Ruhl. However, he said, as technology becomes more advanced, it is not impossible that the renewable technology would be much cheaper. Currently, Ruhl said, the usage of solar, wind and geothermal energies only contribute 1.5 percent of the global energy consumption. "Renewable energy takes only small share of total energy consumption and for the most part, still requires government support. But from the small base, it continues to grow fast, with global deployment reflecting government support as well as natural endowment," said Ruhl. According to Ruhl, in contrast to all other fuels, growth in renewable energy was led by the OECD countries, where policy support is the strongest.

"But like other fuels, 2008 saw rapid growth in the first half followed by a marked deceleration towards the end of the year and into 2009," he said.

Which of the following sentences can be the best title of this passage?

- A. How long shall we wait to use the renewable energy?
- B. Renewable energy is getting cheaper as technology becomes more advanced.
- C. Climate change concerns results in revolution on the use of energy.
- D. Gas demand is to sharply increase as climate change concerns grow.
